Benefits vs. Limits of Internet Health Information

The Internet has become an important source of health information for people around the world. With just a few clicks, people can learn about illnesses, treatments, healthy habits, and medical advice. However, online health information has both benefits and limitations.

On the Internet, people can find many medical facts, advice, and beliefs. The availability of health information can improve people's knowledge and help them make better decisions about their health. For example, people can research symptoms, learn about healthy lifestyles, and understand different medical treatments. They may also change their attitudes about healthcare when they find information written in clear and simple language.

However, information on the Internet is not always accurate, reliable, or helpful to everyone. Some websites may provide old or incorrect information, while others may contain fraudulent or deceptive claims about medicines, treatments, or health products. These false claims may be designed to increase sales and make money. Therefore, people should check information carefully and use trustworthy medical sources. The Internet can be useful for learning about health, but it should not always replace professional medical advice.

In conclusion, the Internet can be a useful tool for finding health information and increasing people's knowledge. However, not all information online is accurate or trustworthy. People should check reliable sources and avoid believing false or misleading claims. Most importantly, online information should support, rather than replace, advice from qualified healthcare professionals.

1. What is the main idea of the passage?
A. The Internet should be avoided when people have health problems.
B. Online health information is useful, but people need to check whether it is reliable.
C. Most medical information on the Internet is written by doctors.

2. Which alternative title would be most suitable for the passage?
A. The Internet: A Complete Replacement for Doctors
B. Finding Free Medicines Online
C. The advantages and Risks of Online Medical Information

3. What does the word "fraudulent" mean in paragraph 3?
A. Honest and carefully researched
B. False or intended to deceive people
C. Easy for everyone to understand

4. What can be inferred about some health websites from the passage?
A. They may provide information mainly to sell products.
B. They are always checked by medical professionals.
C. They only provide information about healthy lifestyles.

5. What is the writer's tone in the passage?
A. Balanced and cautious B. Angry and critical C. Excited and humorous

6. Why might people change their attitudes about healthcare?
A. They can find health information explained clearly online.
B. They are required to follow advice from websites.
C. They can always find free medical treatment online.

7. What does the writer imply by saying that online information should "support, rather than replace" professional advice?
A. People should never search for health information online.
B. Online information can be helpful, but doctors and healthcare professionals remain important.
C. Healthcare professionals usually give less useful advice than websites.

8. What can be inferred about false health claims on the Internet?
A. They may encourage people to spend money on unnecessary products or treatments.
B. They are usually written to improve public health.
C. They are easy to identify because they are always clearly marked as false.

The Influence of Commercials on Children

In today's world, children are surrounded by visual media. From the moment they wake up to the time they go to bed, advertisements play a major role in shaping their thoughts and preferences. Commercials are designed to be memorable and persuasive, using catchy slogans and colourful images to capture attention. Even infants, who cannot yet speak, are influenced by these images. Their early exposure helps them form a sense of what is fun, exciting, or desirable.

Many companies target children because they are considered an easy audience. Children tend to be more passive consumers, accepting what they see without much critical thinking. As they grow, this habit can affect their decision-making and attitudes. For example, a child who repeatedly watches an advertisement for sugary cereal may believe it is healthy simply because the commercial looks fun and informative. This is why the development of media awareness is essential for young audiences. Governments in some countries have introduced policies to limit the number of advertisements aimed at children. They encourage parents and teachers to help children evaluate commercials critically understanding the difference between entertainment and reality.

While advertising can sometimes promote positive messages, such as healthy eating or safety, its main purpose is to sell products. By learning to recognize the techniques behind every original and noticeable advertisement, children can become more thoughtful consumers.

1. What is the main purpose of commercials aimed at children?
A. To educate them about media awareness
B. To sell products and influence preferences
C. To entertain without any goal

2. Why are children considered an easy audience for advertisers?
A. They are passive and easily persuaded
B. They always analyze what they see
C. They ignore advertisements

3. According to the text, what role do slogans play in commercials?
A. They make the message more memorable
B. They confuse the viewers
C. They limit understanding

4. What is the suggested solution to help children handle advertisements better?
A. Banning all commercials
B. Teaching children to evaluate media critically
C. Allowing only fun ads

5. What does the author imply about early exposure to visual media?
A. It can shape children's ideas of what is desirable
B. It prevents children from learning new things
C. It has no effect on their development

6. What does the word 'passive' in paragraph two mean?
A. Active and critical
B. Calm and uninterested
C. Accepting without questioning

7. What type of tone does the passage have?
A. Persuasive and emotional
B. Neutral and informative
C. Humorous and casual

8. Why are some governments trying to limit commercials for children?
A. To protect them from being manipulated
B. To reduce company profits
C. To make advertisements more original

G. 10 A + 11 G EOT 1 Reading 1

Longevity is the length of time a person lives. Today, many people are interested in living longer and staying healthy as they grow older. Although scientists cannot guarantee a long life, research shows that daily habits, social relationships, and the environment can influence how long people live.

One important factor in longevity is a healthy diet. Eating plenty of fruits, vegetables, whole grains, and other nutritious foods provides the body with essential vitamins and minerals. In contrast, eating too much processed food, sugar, and unhealthy fats may increase the risk of serious health problems. Drinking enough water is also important because it helps the body function properly.

Regular physical activity is another key to a longer life. Activities such as walking, swimming, cycling, and gardening can strengthen the heart, improve balance, and help people maintain a healthy weight. Exercise does not always need to be difficult. Even a short daily walk can provide benefits when it becomes a regular habit.

Mental health also plays an important role in longevity. People who manage stress, get enough sleep, and maintain positive relationships often enjoy a better quality of life. Spending time with family and friends can reduce feelings of loneliness and provide emotional support. Furthermore, learning new skills and keeping the brain active may help people remain mentally sharp as they age.

Interestingly, some communities around the world are known for having many people who live to an advanced age. Researchers often study these communities to understand their lifestyles. However, longevity is not simply the result of one special food or activity. It usually depends on several factors working together, including genetics, healthcare, lifestyle, and living conditions.

In conclusion, living longer is not entirely within our control, but many choices can improve our chances of enjoying a long and healthy life. By developing healthy habits and maintaining strong social connections, people can support their well-being at every stage of life.

Choose the correct answer: A, B, or C.

1. What is the main idea of the text?

A. Why older people should avoid physical activity
B. Factors that can help people live longer and healthier lives
C. Why genetics is the only important factor in longevity

2. According to the text, which foods provide essential vitamins and minerals?

A. Fruits, vegetables, and whole grains
B. Processed foods and sugary snacks
C. Foods that contain unhealthy fats

3. What is one benefit of regular physical activity?

A. It guarantees that people will never become ill.
B. It removes the need for medical care.
C. It can strengthen the heart and improve balance.

4. Why can spending time with family and friends be beneficial?

A. It can reduce loneliness and provide emotional support.
B. It prevents all mental health problems.
C. It means people do not need to exercise.

5. What can be inferred about people who want to improve their longevity?

A. They must follow exactly the same lifestyle.
B. They can benefit from making several healthy lifestyle changes.
C. They should focus only on eating nutritious food.

6. What is the writer's tone throughout the text?

A. Angry and critical
B. Humorous and entertaining
C. Informative and encouraging

7. What is the overall message of the text?

A. Living a long life depends entirely on luck.
B. Healthy habits and social connections can support a longer, healthier life.
C. People who live in certain communities never experience health problems.

8. What is the best title for this text?

A. The Challenges of Growing Older
B. Longevity: Secrets to a Longer, Healthier Life
C. Why Exercise Is the Only Key to Longevity

The Rise of Visual Media and the Fall of Traditional TV

For many years, watching television was one of the most popular activities to spend free time. Families used to sit together in the living room every evening to watch the news, favourite shows, or movies. Traditional TV brought people information, entertainment, and stories from around the world. However, over the past decade, the way people watch content has changed dramatically. With the rise of the internet and modern technology, traditional TV is slowly fading, and visual media platforms are becoming more powerful than ever.

Today, most people prefer to watch videos online instead of waiting for programs on TV. Platforms like YouTube, Netflix, and TikTok allow viewers to choose what they want to watch, when they want to watch it. This flexibility is one of the main reasons people are turning away from traditional TV. Viewers no longer have to follow fixed schedules or sit through long commercial breaks. They can simply click a button and enjoy their favorite show instantly on their phone, tablet, or laptop.

Another reason visual media is becoming more popular is that it offers more variety. On social media, there are countless short videos on every topic imaginable — cooking, travel, education, comedy, and more. Many people even create their own content and share it with the world. This makes watching videos online more interactive and personal than watching TV, where viewers can only watch what producers decide to show. Online, everyone can be both a viewer and a creator.

Younger generations, especially teenagers, are leading this change. They spend much more time watching content on YouTube or TikTok than on traditional TV channels. They enjoy short, quick, and creative videos that are often made by people their age. These videos feel more real and closer to their everyday lives. Traditional TV programs, on the other hand, often seem too formal or old-fashioned for modern viewers.

The advertising industry has also changed because of this shift. Companies now focus more on online ads, where they can target specific audiences and measure results. Influencers — people with large followings on social media — play a big role in promoting products and shaping trends. This has made visual media not only a source of entertainment but also a powerful marketing tool.

Of course, traditional TV is not completely gone. Many people still enjoy watching live events like sports matches or news broadcasts. For older generations, television remains a familiar and comfortable part of their daily routine. However, it is clear that the future belongs to online visual media. As internet access becomes faster and more affordable, more people will move away from traditional TV.

In conclusion, traditional television is slowly losing its place in people's lives as visual media platforms continue to grow. The new generation prefers quick, easy, and interactive content that fits their busy lifestyles. The world of entertainment has become more digital, and it is changing the way we watch, create, and share stories every day.

1. What was one of the most common family activities in the past?

4. What can viewers do on social media that they cannot do on TV?

A) Control the TV schedule

B) Change the news

C) Stop all advertisements

D) Write comments and share their own videos

5. Why do many young people prefer short videos?

A) They are quick and creative

B) They are part of school lessons

C) They are only about sports

D) They include news reports

6. What is one major difference between online videos and TV shows?

A) TV shows are shorter

B) Online videos are always live

C) Online videos allow anyone to be a creator

D) TV shows are all free

7. How has advertising changed in recent years?

A) People ignore all ads

B) Ads are no longer shown

The Hidden Language of Commercials

Thirty seconds. That is all the time most television commercials have to convince you to buy something. Yet, in that tiny window, advertisers manage to tell a story, create emotion and leave a lasting impression on viewers. How do they do it?

First, they carefully choose their language. A memorable slogan, like a short rhyme or a catchy phrase, is repeated so often that it sticks in the viewer's mind long after the advert has finished. Advertisers also favour powerful adjectives such as 'new', 'fresh' and 'amazing', which suggest that the product will improve your life.

Visuals are just as important as words. Bright colours, smiling faces and attractive settings are used to link a product with happiness and success. Research suggests that viewers often remember the feeling of an advertisement rather than the actual information it contained. For this reason, many commercials say very little about how a product works but spend most of their time showing how wonderful life seems when you own it.

Music plays a quieter but equally powerful role. A familiar song can trigger positive memories, while a fast rhythm can create excitement. Sometimes the music is the only thing viewers can recall.

Not everyone is convinced by these techniques. Critics argue that some commercials mislead audiences, particularly children, who may struggle to tell the difference between entertainment and persuasion. In response, many countries have introduced rules requiring advertisers to be honest and to avoid false claims. Media experts therefore encourage viewers to ask simple questions: Who made this message? What do they want me to do? What are they not telling me?

Understanding these tricks does not spoil the fun of watching a clever advert. On the contrary, it allows us to enjoy them while still making our own decisions.

1. How much time do most TV commercials have to persuade viewers?

A) about thirty seconds

B) about three minutes

C) as long as they want

2. Why is a slogan repeated many times?

A) so it is easy to remember

B) so it explains how the product works

C) so the advert is longer

3. Why do advertisers use smiling faces and bright colours?

A) to make the advert cheaper

B) to connect the product with happiness

C) to teach viewers about science

4. What do viewers often remember most about an advert?

A) the price

B) the technical information

C) the feeling it gave them

Sample Opinion Essay: Health Clubs – Pros and Cons

Nowadays, many people join health clubs to improve their fitness and live a healthy life. Although health clubs have some disadvantages, I believe that their advantages are greater. This essay will discuss this topic with some details.

On the one hand, health clubs offer many benefits. They provide modern exercise equipment and professional trainers who can give people useful advice. Moreover, members can enjoy different activities, such as swimming, yoga and fitness classes. They can also meet new people and make friends while exercising. As a result, they can improve both their physical and mental health.

On the other hand, joining a health club has some disadvantages. The membership fees can be expensive, and some clubs are often crowded. In addition, people with busy schedules may not have enough time to visit the gym regularly. Also, there is a risk of injury if people use the equipment incorrectly.

However, these problems can be reduced. People can choose affordable or inexpensive clubs, exercise during quieter hours and join a club near their homes. They should also follow trainers' instructions to avoid injuries.

In conclusion, although health clubs have some disadvantages, I think their benefits are more important because they help people stay active, healthy and happy. However, people should try hard to avoid the risks as much as they can.

A Healthy Choice: Joining a Health Club

Joining a health club can be a fantastic decision for your well-being. These clubs, often called gyms, offer a variety of ways to stay fit and healthy.

Most health clubs have a lot of modern exercise machines, like treadmills and bikes. They also offer many classes, such as yoga, Zumba, or spinning, led by expert instructors. This is a great way to try different activities and meet new people. Many clubs also have extra facilities, like swimming pools, saunas, or even cafés.

A key benefit of a health club is the structure. When you join, an instructor usually helps you create a personal training plan. This plan is specifically for you and your goals.

Memberships vary. Some clubs let you pay monthly, and you can stop anytime without extra fees. Others might ask you to sign a contract for a longer time. Before joining, it is a good idea to visit a few clubs. Many offer a free first visit so you can see the facilities and atmosphere.

Ultimately, a health club offers the tools and community to support a healthier, stronger you.

Health Clubs: Pros and Cons

Have you ever thought about joining a health club to improve your health? Nowadays, many people join health clubs to stay fit and enjoy a healthy lifestyle. In my opinion, joining a health club is a great idea because it offers many benefits, although it has some disadvantages. This essay will discuss this topic with some details.

First of all, health clubs provide different types of exercise equipment, such as treadmills and exercise bikes. Moreover, people can join classes like yoga, swimming, and jogging. As a result, they can become stronger, lose weight, and improve their physical health. In addition, they can meet new people and make friends.

However, joining a health club has some disadvantages. Firstly, membership fees can be expensive, especially for people on a limited budget. Secondly, some clubs are very crowded, particularly in the evening. Therefore, people may have to wait to use the machines. Furthermore, exercising regularly requires time and commitment.

For example, my friend joined a health club last year because he wanted to lose weight. At first, he found exercising difficult, but he attended three times a week. After a few months, he became fitter, healthier, and more confident. Although he had to pay monthly fees, he felt that it was worth the money.

In conclusion, I believe that joining a health club is a good way to improve physical and mental health. Despite the costs and crowded facilities, the benefits are greater than the drawbacks. I advise people to work hard to reduce the negatives.

Understanding and Managing Stress

Stress means pressure or tension and is one of the most common causes of health problems in modern life. Everyone experiences stress from time to time; it is a natural reaction when changes or challenges occur. However, too much stress can cause problems with our physical, emotional, and mental health. This essay will discuss the effects of stress and how we can manage it wisely.

Physically, stress can affect your heart, causing a faster pulse rate and high blood pressure. It can also cause stomach aches or breathing problems. Emotionally, people under stress often feel anxious, tired, angry, or moody. They might overreact to small problems, like yelling at a child for dropping a glass of juice. If stress continues for a long time, it can lead to serious problems like depression or even unhealthy habits such as drinking too much alcohol to feel better.

Therefore, it is important to manage stress wisely. You can try different methods. Being active is a good idea; exercise helps reduce emotional intensity and clears your thoughts. Connecting with friends and family also helps you relax and see problems in a different way. Taking time for yourself to do things you enjoy, avoiding unhealthy habits like smoking, and getting enough sleep are all important steps.

In conclusion, remember, you cannot avoid stress completely, but you can learn and apply some coping strategies to deal with it in healthy ways to protect your well-being.

WRITING 2 - Read the text again. Now write an opinion essay about stress:
You should include:
- the reasons why people feel under stress these days.
- the importance of managing stress and what ways can be used for that.
- Describe one personal or observed experience related to stress management.

PART 1: Sample Answer

The main idea of the text is about understanding and controlling stress or pressure. Stress has become very common in modern life. However, too much of it can harm your physical, emotional, and mental health. Long-term stress can cause physical problems like high blood pressure as well as emotional struggles such as anxiety, anger, and depression. To manage stress wisely, you should exercise, sit with family, go out with friends, get enough sleep, and avoid unhealthy habits like smoking. While it is impossible to avoid stress completely, using healthy coping strategies will help you reduce its effects.

PART 2: Sample Answer

Stress and How to Manage It

Have you ever thought about why we feel under stress? Stress has become a common problem in modern life. In my opinion, although we cannot avoid stress completely, we can learn how to manage it in healthy ways. This essay will discuss this topic with some details.

To begin with, there are several reasons why people feel stressed these days. Firstly, students worry about exams, homework, and getting good grades. Secondly, adults often feel pressure because of their jobs, financial problems, and family responsibilities. Moreover, spending too much time on social media can make people feel worried and unhappy.

Secondly, managing stress is very important because too much stress can affect our physical and mental health. For example, it may cause headaches, high blood pressure, tiredness, and anxiety. Therefore, people should find healthy ways to relax and feel better.

Thirdly, there are many ways to reduce stress. People can do exercise, get enough sleep, and spend time with friends and family. For example, my friend was very stressed before his final exams. He started walking every evening and organizing his study time. As a result, he became more relaxed and more confident.

To make a long story short, stress is a normal part of life, but we should not allow it to control us. I believe that following healthy habits and managing our time can help us live happier and healthier lives.

The Effects of Screens at Different Ages

Screens are an important part of modern life. Young children, teenagers and adults use devices such as tablets, laptops and smartphones. However, these devices can affect people differently depending on their age.

For young children, screens can have both positive and negative effects. Tablets and computers can provide educational games and videos. These activities can make learning more interesting. However, spending too much time on a screen can reduce the time children spend playing and talking to other people. This can affect their physical and social development, including their language development. These problems may be more serious because young children are still growing and developing. This is why parents should help young children manage their screen time.

Teenagers and adults also use screens for studying, working, communicating and relaxing. These activities can be useful because screens provide easy access to information and communication. However, too much time on social media or entertainment can affect sleep, concentration and physical activity. These effects can also affect young children, but teenagers and adults usually have more control over when and how they use screens. This means that they can make their own decisions about their screen habits.

Overall, screens can be useful for people of all ages, but they can also cause problems when they are used too much. These problems can be more serious for young children because they have less control over their screen use and are still developing. Teenagers and adults may experience some of these problems, but they are generally better able to manage their screen habits.

In conclusion, the effects of screens are different depending on an individual's age because they are at different stages of development and have different levels of control over how they use screens.

Read the text above and summarize the main ideas in your own words. Write 3-4 sentences.

Write an opinion essay about screen time and the impact on people.

You should include:

- The effects of screens on children
- The influence of screens on teenagers and adults
- What people can do to reduce these effects.

Write at least 170 words in paragraphs.

Part 1 : Model Answer: (main ideas of the text)

The main idea of the text is about the effects of screens on different ages such as children, teenagers and adults. These days screens are everywhere. They have both positives and negatives. For example, children can learn many things when they play video games. However, they may ignore school and become isolated. Moreover, young people and adults use screens for doing business and studying but they may become dependent and less active. Overall, screens can be good and bad , so it is very important to put a time limit and use them wisely.

Part 2: Model Answer (opinion essay)

Screen Time and Its Impact on People

Have you ever wondered how many hours you spend looking at a screen every day? Nowadays, screens are an important part of our daily lives. Although they have many benefits, too much screen time can cause problems. In my opinion, screens affect children, teenagers and adults in different ways, but people can reduce these effects by following healthy habits. This essay will discuss this topic with some details.

First of all, screens can have negative effects on children because they need time to play and communicate with others. For example, children who spend many hours playing games may have difficulty sleeping or become less active. Moreover, they may have problems making friends.

Secondly, screens also influence teenagers and adults. Teenagers may become distracted from their studies, while adults may suffer from eye strain and back pain. For instance, some teenagers spend hours on social media instead of studying, and adults may use computers all day at work.

Finally, there are several ways to reduce these effects. People should limit their screen time and take regular breaks. For example, children can play outside, while teenagers and adults can enjoy sports, read books or spend time with family. In addition, people should avoid using phones before bedtime.

In conclusion, screens are useful, but excessive use can affect our health and daily lives. I believe that using screens wisely is the best way to enjoy their benefits without suffering from their disadvantages.
